

suggested ~~a~~ building a Windmill. He then convinces the animals that the windmill was his idea, abusing his power again to ~~make~~ make himself look good and Snowball to be perceived as the enemy. He now has full control over the farm.

By the end of the novel, all of the principles first proposed by Old Major have been broken by Napoleon and the pigs. They ~~have~~ ~~begin~~ begin to mirror Mr Jones' characteristics, by living in the house, walking on two legs and using whips. The farm has effectively done a full circle back to where it started. Orwell uses this novel to explore human nature and show how people can abuse their power. He makes it relevant by ~~carefully~~ ~~characterising~~ using the animals to represent real historical figures, such as Napoleon representing ~~Stalin~~ Joseph Stalin and Mr Jones representing Tsar Nicholas II. ~~The~~ ~~is~~ The themes in the novel make you consider how ~~the~~ the people currently in charge of our society are using their ~~own~~ power, and whether they are ~~using~~ ~~it~~ using it for good or not.

Excellent work!